NEGRO SLAYER IS STILL AT LARGE NEAR BURLINGTON

Three Suspects Released And
One Still Being Held

RAIN AIDED THE ESCAPE

Shower, Authorities Say, Put Bloodhounds Off The Scent

BURLINGTON, N. J., July 9.—Intensive search of houses in the Negro colonies and beating of the woods and fields in the southern section of the city by local and State Police, has failed to reveal any trace of the Negro bandit who, early yesterday morning, shot and killed Charles Alexander, 27 year old South High restaurant proprietor.

Three suspects, arrested by police in different parts of the county, were released after investigation by detectives. Another suspect, captured by Coroner Benjamin Farmer along the River road, near Riverside, is held in that city for further questioning. The prisoner claims he was in Long Branch Thursday night.

Police Captain Johnson, who drove past the restaurant and saw the Negro talking to Alexander five minutes before the shooting, says he believes the slayer was a stranger in Burlington, but probably with acquaintances among southern Negroes recently colonized here by industrial plants. He declares he believes the slayer is still in hiding in or near the city, and that every house where he might be given shelter will be searched. Farmers in the vicinity have been warned to watch for suspicious Negroes on their places and to report any such to the police at once.

Police say the slayer's action indicates that he probably has a record as a bandit. He entered the Alexander restaurant at 1:15 o'clock yesterday morning, after watching from the step of the Junior High School, across the street, until other late customers had departed. After purchasing and eating some sandwiches, he stepped to the counter as if to pay his check, but instead raised a .38 calibre automatic and commanded Alexander Deleasios, one of the proprietors, to throw up his hands. Deleasios complied and handed the Negro $15 in bills. The bandit then reached over the counter and took $50 from the cash register.

Charles Alexander entered from a side room and the Negro ordered him to put his hands. As he complied with the order the Negro shot him through the heart, killing him instantly; then turned his weapon on Deleasios. The latter dropped behind the counter as a bullet cleared his head.

Produce The Evidence

(EDITORIAL)

IN the course of an editorial appearing upon the first page of the Independent of yesterday, these statements were made:

"He displays no concern about the non-activities of the Chief of Police and his officers in cleaning up the bootlegging industry of Bristol, notwithstanding the traffic is bringing a far greater and more undesirable notoriety to our fair city than these firemen ever did. . . he might with perfect propriety instruct his Chief of Police, as he did concerning the firemen, to clean up the booze joints, hootch houses and private distilleries with which the town is over-run, and the location of which the Chief knows, or should know."

Evidently the Independent is about to launch another of its campaigns of villification of Bristol, based wholly upon cowardly insinuations and innuendoes. Of that we may have something more definite to say at a later date. This we desire to say now—plainly, bluntly and emphatically:

If the Independent has in its possession any or all of the evidence which the above-quoted statements were designed to imply that the Independent does possess, and it has made no effort whatever to place that evidence in the hands of the proper authorities—the Burgess or the Chief of Police, or both, or the District Attorney of the County—the Independent is guilty of a dastardly injustice against this community and its citizenship, and stands publicly convicted of deliberate hypocrisy in all its windy protestations about local pride and patriotism, and interest in Bristol, its good name and general welfare.

If the Independent does not possess the evidence to justify the statements quoted above, nor the inferences which they were designed to create in the public mind, then the Independent is equally guilty of a dastardly injustice against this community, its citizenship, and public officials, in seeking to deliberately besmirk both, merely to create a little imaginary political capital for its own peculiar activities.

We therefore call upon the Independent to immediately place in the hands of the Burgess and Chief of Police all of the evidence in its possession concerning "the bootlegging industry of Bristol" and "the booze joints, hootch houses and private distilleries" with which it says "the town is over-run," in order that a fair measure may be had of the Independent's sincerity in the past and its honesty in the present, and in order also that arrests may be made wherever valid evidence justifies.

The Courier is assured that the Burgess and Chief of Police will act immediately upon any responsible evidence of law violations. The duty and responsibility of the Bucks County Independent are, therefore, both clearly established.

SEVEN BURNED TO DEATH WHEN STILL EXPLODES

Mother and Six Children, Near Reading, Perish In Explosion

HUSBAND IS INJURED

READING, PA., July 9.(INS).—Mrs. Catherine M. Fair, 35, and her six small children perished early today when an explosion fired their home near Bernville, 12 miles north-east of here.

Mrs. Fair's Husband, Mark, who is in a critical condition in Homeopathic Hospital, and his friend, Angelo Consoli, were also burned seriously. The men escaped by leaping from a second story window after vainly trying to rescue the trapped family.

Mrs. Fair, who expected a visit from the stork soon, and the children Florence, 15, Catherine, 14, Virginia, 10, Buddy, 5, Fern, 3, and Miriam, 1, were asleep on the second floor when suddenly a terrific blast shook the neighborhood.

Fair told police the explosion was caused by an oil stove. Harry Hilpinger, chief of Berks county detectives, says, however, that the tragedy was due to a still operated in the cellar. Hilpinger claims he found several articles used in the manufacture of liquor among the wreckage.

Hulmeville

This morning Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hopkins and daughter Irene, Harold Haefner, of Hulmeville; and Mrs. Hopkins' mother, Mrs. Young, left for a two week's motor trip to Pittsburgh and Grassflat. At the latter place they will visit at the home of Mrs. Young, who has been spending several weeks recently in Hulmeville.

The July business meeting of the M. E. Epworth League Society will be an out-door session, and the place of meeting will be announced at tomorrow's services. The session will be held Monday night.

The home of Mrs. John Egly, Lincoln avenue, will be the meeting place for the business session of the M. E. Ladies' Aid Society, Tuesday night.

Methodist Sunday School Picnics At Trenton Today

At 1 o'clock this afternoon three trucks will leave the Methodist Church to convey the Sunday School scholars to the place of the annual picnic, Cadwalader Park, Trenton, P. J.

Contests have been arranged for and prizes will be given to the winners. It is expected that many others will drive to the picnic grounds in private machines, as the members of the families of those who attend the Sunday School have been invited to participate.

Pastor's Aid Society Holds Annual Outing

The Pastor's Aid Society of the Methodist Church held its annual picnic on Thursday, July 7, at 3:30 P. M. instead of during June as previously enjoyable one, took place on the lawn planned. The affair, which was a most enjoyable one, took place on the lawn of the home of Mrs. Frank Woodington, Dorrance st. The date of the picnic was changed because of the death of the president, Mrs. William Davis.

On Thursday, Mrs. William Betz, of Walnut street, vice-president, was in charge, and a tasty supper was served on the lawn at 6 o'clock.

Those present were: Mrs. William P. Betz, Mrs. Doron Green, Mrs. Harry Arnold, Mrs. Estep, Mrs. Harry Bunting, Mrs. Elizabeth Quicksall, Mrs. Charles P. Dungan, Mrs. Ella Rine, Mrs. Anna Winter, Mrs. Adam Smith, Miss Elizabeth Neisser, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Woodington.

The next meeting will be held in September at the residence of Mrs. Charles P. Dungan, Bath street.

SOLICITING FUNDS

The committee soliciting for the lawn fete to be held July 14, 15th and 16th for the benefit of Harriman Hospital finds that it is impossible to call on everyone in Bristol and vicinity to request a contribution. Those desiring to give and who are not seen by the committee are urged to telephone the Hospital, giving name and address and donations will be called for.

RETURNS HOME

Mrs. Lester B. Shoemaker has returned to her home, "White Columns," Tullytown, with her son Stanley Morris, born June 24th, in Dr. J. Fred Wagner's private hospital, Bristol. Mrs. Shoemaker was formerly Miss Claudia B. Chronister, of Bristol.

THE ELASTIC DAY

A group of railroad executives, headed by Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, suggests what it pleases to call "an elastic workingday." It recognizes the eight-hour principle and is designed to stabilize employment throughout the year.

The business of the carriers fluctuates, as all other business does. In times of depression it is necessary for them to furlough some employees that others may work their full eight hours. And when business is above normal extra men must be taken on temporarily.

The executives argue that if the length of the work day could be increased in active periods to nine or ten hours and reduced to eight when business falls off, the roads would be able to employ a more uniform force. A plan that promises to minimize "lay-offs" commands consideration.

While the eternally suspicious will look upon the idea as an entering wedge leading to restoration of the ten and twelve-hour working day, the calm and deliberate, even in labor circles, will recognize wherein it is economically sound and to the advantage of railroad workers. It would deprive some of part time employment but this could be overlooked if it assured the great majority of railroaders their full eight hours or more the year around.

Both the railroad managements and the brotherhoods should give the matter deliberate consideration and give the plan a test if it promises any reward at all.

MENACE OF THE JINGO

Premier Poincare's return to the Philippines against Germany which was his custom during the Ruhr occupation is most untimely and lamentable. No good can be served by seeking to inflame scars of the war.

It is pleasing to learn that most French opinion is highly critical of Poincare's latest speech. The Daves plan, the Locarno treaties and the entrance of Germany into the League of Nations are steps in reconstruction which lack a basis as long as hymns of hate issue from those who control national policy.

Between M. Briand, French foreign minister, and Dr. Stresemann, German Foreign Minister there have been in recent months relations marked by mutual tact and forbearance which promised much for the future of European peace. The French premier's attack is an implied rebuke for the policy of its most able cabinet member.

There is no shorter route to war than jingo oratory. It incites to belligerency both the compatriots of the jingoist and the nation at which he directs his usually baseless charges. Jingoists talked the world into war in 1914 and for decades have been trying to set the Pacific powers at one another's throats.

One can imagine no more vicious crime against society than that of the politician who embroils nations for personal aggrandizement or political profit, unless it be a government which sends its people into war to divert their attention from its maladministration and the results thereof. And yet they are not rare offenses. The finger of guilt is pointed right now at Poincare and the Russian and Italian governments.

Early application for admission is advised, as the number of students to be accepted is limited.

The Day School offers the following instruction: the REGULAR TEXTILE COURSE, the CHEMISTRY, DYEING AND PRINTING COURSE, of three years each, for which the Diploma is awarded. Two year Courses in Cottons, Woolens and Worsteds, Silks, Jacquard Design, and Dyeing, respectively, for which the certificate is awarded.

For practical work in weaving, designing, and the teaching of manipulation of textiles, generally, eminent European educators have declared the Philadelphia Textile School to be superior to similar European institutions.

Knowledge is the key to success. For forty-four years the PHILADELPHIA TEXTILE SCHOOL has concentrated on training young men to meet the industry's needs. Its superiority is universally recognized and its graduates in constant demand.

What Every Girl Should Know

By GISA PRUCHONE

Copyright, 1927, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.
"WHAT EVERY GIRL SHOULD KNOW," with Patsy Ruth Miller, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Mary Sullivan—slender, beautiful, red-headed—is the meteor of the tennis universe. A poetical, queerly spiritual girl is Mary, despite her physical prowess. She has grown up with tennis balls. Her mother died seeing them for a living. Her spirit lives on in Mary. Mary becomes acquainted with Wally Tomlinson, a young reporter. Mary keeps house for her brothers, David and Robert. David, the family support, hopes Mary will get safely married; but Mary disbelieves in love. Wally tells her he loves her. She, troubled, says she does not love him.

CHAPTER III—Continued

He spoke only once before reaching home. A home in which, incidentally, there hung an unwanted air of excitement.

"I want you to know, Mary, that this love I am offering you is yours until you tell me definitely that you don't want it. I shall not kiss you again, either, until you ask me to. But both kisses and love are yours, sweet. Forever. Whenever you feel the urge for either—"

"I said Mary faintly.
He placed his hand over her mouth, gently. "Don't say it. You don't know what you mean now. You're just a sweet little kid who has made a path for herself to tread, and no knowledge of either yourself or the world has gone into the making. Cheerio, sweet. I'll be around." He helped her out, and stood with head uncovered until the screen door slammed behind her, and wondered vaguely what was up. The windows of the cottage all glowed yellow with light, and the shadows of figures moved against the light, blotting it out. He drove off. "Some neighborhood gathering, probably," he thought, and then his being, including all his thoughts, reverted to the person of Mary and the feel of her elastic young body against his own.

"Rather a shock, Mary," Mr. Tomlinson said.

CHAPTER IV

Young Robert flung himself upon his sister as she entered. Young Robert's face was grimy where the tears had coursed and where his hands had tried to erase them. It was difficult to imagine Lancelot weeping no matter what the adversity. But then, Lancelot had had no such shock to contend with. Robert had tried pummeling the officers (there had been two of them) with his hard young fists, in lieu of a lance, and strangely enough, the blows had glanced off the blue uniforms. He had kicked them. Kicked them with his heels as being so much more effective than the soft toes of his sneakers, but that had been worthless. One of the policemen had then glanced down and pushed away the small red head. A gentle push, that had, nevertheless, thrown Robert against the wall opposite. But he had risen and returned, as Lancelot would have done. As indeed, he had done times without number when the armored foe had proved very nearly invincible. And had always won out. Lancelot the brave. Therefore, Robert, too, returned. A frenzied little boy with tears wagging their dizzy way down his cheeks, and ears the color of his hair. But it had done no good. They had taken David away, after muttering that it was against their duty—they could wait no longer for Mary. Then David kissed young Robert, tasting the flavor of his tears, and told him that now he was the only one left to take care of Mary, and had gone off between the blue coats, with Mrs. Tomlinson shouting after them that she would certainly speak to the Mayor about this shameful affair. Mrs. Tomlinson then held young Robert close to her thin breast, and it had felt good. Very dimly mother had returned to the boy, with the gentle strokes of Mrs. Tomlinson's hand on his hair, and his sob had ceased. Then they waited up for Mary, Mrs. Tomlinson holding Robert, and Mr. Tomlinson making soft purrs in the bowl of his pipe as he cuddled that. Freddie Tomlinson and Margaret each stood guard at a window, being anxious to be the first to tell the others of Mary's arrival. Between the various pairs of feet and around them stalked Patch, vaguely disturbed. Once she had tried drawing her paw coyly down the length of Robert's brown stocking, anticipating a response of some sort, and there had been none. Which bothered her intensely, and was the reason she stalked, with tail curled high.

When Mary was seen drawing up to the curb, the two Tomlinsons raced to their mother and whispered, "Here she is." Somehow they feared to disturb the calamitous atmosphere of the room, that hung heavy above their young heads. Had they spoken above a whisper they felt that mutterings and growls would descend upon them, reminiscent of the storm that had just passed. Then Mary had entered with the little rush that was characteristic of her, pulling her close hat off as she came, and Robert had scrambled off Mrs. Tomlinson's lap to throw himself upon her.

"Mary," he sobbed, with great heebiebies to his shame. He thought he had forced them down, deeply. "Mary, they've taken Dave away to the p'lice station because he had a whiskey bottle and I told them it wasn't nothing but tea for his supper and they took Dave away anyway." He then held Mary tightly about the waist and placed his head against her, and sobbed and sobbed, with one sneaked foot curled about the ankle of the other and rubbing up and down, endlessly.

Mary's arms tightened about the boy automatically. Her mind didn't do that, however. Her mind was still. It was as if a rock had been thrown at a living thing, and killed its pulse. That was the numbness of her mind. Then, when wounded and struggling it forced its way above the heaviness of the fogs that encumbered it, it had revived sufficiently to pulsate painfully. She felt it in her head and in her heart and where Robert's hands enfolded her so tightly in back. She struggled up above the waters that had ensnared her.

"Bobbie—hush." To Mrs. Tomlinson she said, "Please—what has happened?" Whereat that lady gazed long at Mary, endeavored to speak twice, and fled from the house, trying to escape before the tears fell from the eyes that swam with them. Freddie Tomlinson and Margaret stood like little automatons at their father's side, though Mrs. Tomlinson had clutched at them to follow her as she passed. It now remained for Mr. Tomlinson to inform Mary of the happenings of the afternoon, which it was strangely difficult to do. He removed his pipe from his mouth and knocked it slowly against the table, feeling Mary's eyes upon him, and then said, "Well, Mary." To the little Tomlinsons he said, "You two had better go," which they did, Freddie pushing Margaret before him through the screen door, and Margaret very loath.

"Well, Mary." He turned to her, stuffing his pipe into his coat pocket.

"Please tell me, Mr. Tomlinson," it seemed as if all of Mary had concentrated in her eyes, as though her body had melted into the atmosphere, which, being a practical man, Mr. Tomlinson realized was, of course, ridiculous.

"Rather a shock, Mary," Mr. Tomlinson said.

"Yes? Yes? Please. What is it?"

He paused. It was proving extremely difficult. "You know the Grammys, Mary?"

"Yes. Yes. Yes." How long would he roll the morsel about under his tongue, and relish it? Which wasn't quite sporting of Mary, for he alone knew the weight of his news.

"Well—Arthur Graham and his fiancée were out in his car. Davis was driving his truck. Davis claims which is the truth of course, and you and I know it—Davis says he couldn't help crashing into Graham's car if he wanted to save the boy—a boy had run out into the street in front of the truck, Mary. Well—he crashed, all right!" Mr. Tomlinson turned and walked to the window. He snapped the shade, and it rolled up with a jerk. Outside was the screen of the hedge that surrounded the house. The breeze weaving through it caused it to tremble a bit. Mr. Tomlinson kept the blankness of his back toward Mary. Kept it there until she asked, "Is that all?" She asked it twice, for her voice made a little rasping sound when first she had tried to speak, and she found that she couldn't, after all. The second time, Mr. Tomlinson turned from the window. He had carefully drawn the shade before doing so. The curtains had caught. Mr. Tomlinson released them with a carefulness that became him oddly. Mary repressed the wild desire to laugh at Mr. Tomlinson stretching on his toes, to free the curtains. He then turned and came to where she stood with young Robert clutching her convulsively.

HOUSES—

that can be made into HOMES

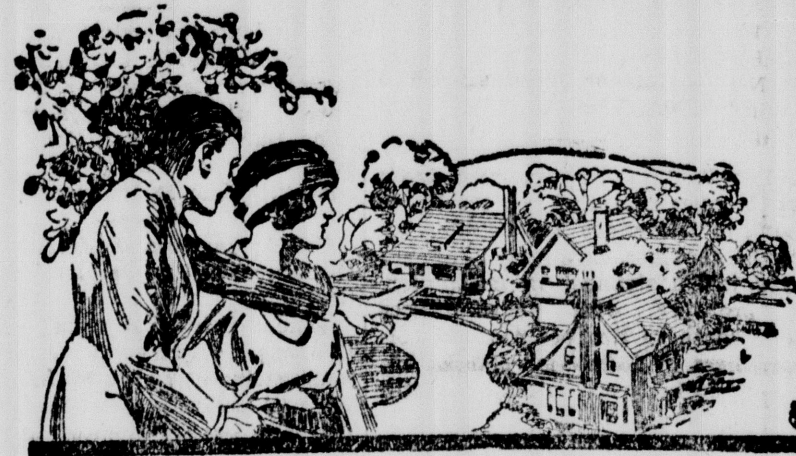

Two-story brick residences containing six rooms and bath. All newly papered and painted throughout. Conveniences which are to be found in any modern house today—electricity, gas, hot air heater, water. Front porches of ample size and large bay-windows on second floor. A rear yard just big enough to be kept neat and attractive. With the touch of a housewife these dwellings can be made into real homes of comfort. Rents are very moderate. Location is good.

New Frigidaire Recipes Make Tempting Menus

A quarter of a million copies of the new booklet, "Frigidaire Frozen Dainties," were distributed in two weeks from the time the first edition came from the presses and a second edition of the same size is now being run to meet the tremendous demand for this authoritative booklet on chilled and frozen dishes, according to the C. W. Winter, local Frigidaire dealer.

"Just as the automobile changed the travel of the American public, so is the electric refrigerator changing tastes in food," says Mr. Winter. "When Frigidaire was introduced, everyone realized that it afforded the housewife an opportunity to prepare many new and tempting dishes, but on account of its newness, only a few recipes of the proper nature were available.

"This 1927 booklet, prepared by a nationally known home economics expert, assembles for the first time recipes for the best and most delightful salads, desserts and special dishes contrived by housewives since the electric refrigerator made these dainty and tempting dishes possible.

"Before 'Frigidaire Frozen Dainties' was published, careful tests were made of each recipe to insure its practicability and made certain that it was within the limitations of the average housewife's cooking equipment. The result is a wonderful collection of pleasing and attractive dishes, many of them new, which will prove a revelation to the cook and a source of pleasure and enjoyment for the entire family.

"The new booklet, now being distributed by all Frigidaire dealers includes not only recipes for mousses, sherbets, ices, parfaits, salads and the like, but also gives some interesting hints on utilization of left-overs in preparation of toothsome and appetizing dishes for the following day."
